The case concerned a company that repairs, among others phones and smartphones. In addition, the company has signed a contract with the insurer, under which it is to provide comprehensive damage settlement services. So it will accept applications, analyze what's broken, and exchange phones for new ones. The insurer will pay her salary, except that it will not cover the cost of repairs alone or the cost of replacing displays and entire devices.

Moreover, if the costs of repairs carried out by the company exceed the assumed revenues from insurance premiums, the company will have to cover part of the losses incurred by the insurer. However, if the repair costs are lower than the insurer's receipts from premiums, this will cover part of the losses incurred by the company. This would be settled at the end of the year, based on insurance claims settlement reports.
